Evaluation of an indirect immunofluorescence test (FluoRep kit) for the detection of antibodies against Norwalk virus and other human enteric caliciviruses. The performance of a commercial immunofluorescence assay kit (FluoRep kit; NorDiag, Stockholm, Sweden) for the detection of antibodies against Norwalk (NV) and other human enteric caliciviruses was evaluated. In a study of 427 adult human sera, the kit's sensitivity (0.95) and specificity (0.99) for NV-specific antibodies were higher than the sensitivity (0.77) and specificity (0.95) of the Vironostika enzymedirect immunofluorescent assay (VEDIA) for the same purpose. No correlation was found between the FluoRep kit and the VEDIA for any calicivirus antibody titer. The performance of the FluoRep kit for the detection of antibodies against the closely related murine Norwalk virus and San Miguel sea lion virus was also evaluated in a study of 151 mouse sera. The kit was positive for NV-specific antibodies in 40% (25/62) of samples from vaccinated mice and in 60% (3/5) of samples from control mice. The kit had a sensitivity of 0.95 (25/27) and a specificity of 0.99 (3/3) in this study. The FluoRep kit was positive for antibody to human and animal caliciviruses in all 75 of the human sera evaluated in this study. The results of our study indicate that the FluoRep kit is a suitable reagent for the diagnosis of antibodies against NV and other human enteric caliciviruses.

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to electrical connection techniques and, in particular, to methods and apparatus for electrically connecting to a semiconductor wafer surface.
